In schools all over the world, Artificial Intelligence (AI) is rewriting how knowledge is delivered to students and how their progress is measured. The gradual rise of AI in education has opened doors to new possibilities (personalised learning, efficient grading, etc.). Yet, it has also exposed concerns about dependency on AI sources.

AI changed education to be more adaptive and personalised for students than ever before. In traditional classrooms, a single teacher is responsible for the learning needs of many students, each with different strengths and struggles in the subject. AI tools now have the ability to support students' individual needs. The result of this personalised teaching is the students showing greater engagement and higher retention for their subjects.

However, while AI can make learning more efficient, it can also make it less human and less enjoyable. As schools are increasingly using machines to give feedback, there is the risk that education has become too mechanical which reduces students' abilities.

The careful balance between human and artificial intelligence will be a crucial factor in defining the next era of learning. Whether AI becomes a tool for positive change or dependency depends on how wisely we use it.

A/ Comprehension.

Read the text carefully to do the activities:

Poverty and conflicts pose multiple challenges to children. They can deprive them of their future in education. Young boys and girls engage in child labour when their families encounter financial challenges. They face the dilemma of working to support their families or attending school. In the Gambella region of Ethiopia, 13-year-old Ojulu works to support his family, but had to quit school.

Every morning, Ojulu goes to the gold mine site and stays for long hours under a scorching sun. He soaks his pan into water and sees if some tiny glittering particles of gold remain at the bottom of the pan. "I started working here three years ago," says Ojulu. He regrets that he left school at an early age. "My father always wanted me to be a good student," he adds.

In Gambella, the UNICEF is coordinating with social workers to help children engaged in child labour get back to school. They support vulnerable families with psychosocial assistance and connect them also to basic services.
