Part I: Reading

Read the text carefully, then do the following activities:

Education is central to prevent corruption. Although clear laws and regulations are well-designed, institutions will not be able to prevent corruption if citizens do not actively demand accountability from government and institutions.

The attitude and expectations of citizens are crucial in building a responsive public administration. Ethics education for young people can help break the cycle of corruption as today's youths are potential leaders of tomorrow. However anti-corruption does not work in isolation. The environment in which children grow up plays a decisive role in shaping their attitudes. Ethics education must be part of a broader effort to improve governance and reduce corruption. Within this framework, children must have an appropriate and conducive learning environment that values integrity and honesty.

Thus, in order to be credible, anti-corruption teaching must relate to daily lives of the students and address real life dilemmas, conflicts of interests and corruption cases. Several civil society organizations around the world have played an important role in making anti-corruption education a reality. Though they have approached the topic from different angles, they will set up a common goal which consist of strengthening young people's attitude and demands of accountability, and ultimately, to build trust in government and public sectors.

Thousands and thousands of schools worldwide have set up themselves the goal of making anti-corruption fighting a reality by involving their students in anti-corruption project; for example, in Georgia, the project focuses on secondary school students who were asked to write about their personal experiences with corruption in a national essay. In Italy, the students are given extra credits for participating in anti-corruption debates.

In conclusion, whether anti-corruption education takes place inside or outside the formal educational system, it remains the most efficient way of fighting the growth of "a don't care attitude" towards a global phenomenon which can ultimately lead to the destruction of our modern civilization.
